Four astronauts have to stay 1000 days in a space station around Earth in order to prove that a trip to Europa, one of Jupiter's moons, is possible and beneficial. They make an astounding discovery about the potential for life on Europa but their findings are overshadowed by large-scale tragedy at home on Earth. Unable to make contact with anyone at home, they are at a loss for what to do next. Personal demons conflict with professional duties, and a classic science fiction fable of existential drama plays against beautiful images of space.

DISTINCTIONS

Calgary International Film Festival - Louis Hobson, Calgary Sun – “Project-M is reminiscent of “2001: A Space Odyssey” the granddaddy of space dramas and, more recently, of Sandra Bullock’s “Gravity.” It is cerebral sci-fi and that is its greatest merit because we become so invested in these four people that we want to know their fates and are willing to take this voyage with them, quite literally in my case, to the final moments of the film.”

Eclipse Magazine - Sheldon Wiebe – *“One of the best movies I’ve seen this year is a French-Canadian sci-fi movie called Project-M. Four astronauts on a 1,000-day mission aboard a space station find themselves at a loss when, 900 days in, nuclear war breaks out on Earth. I have to say that director/co-writer Eric Piccoli is someone we should be watching out for – Kudos to him and his co-writers. You don’t make a film this good unless it’s great on the page.” Final Grade: A+

San Diego Film Festival: Project-M (2014) - Post – from Snapcracklewatch Movie Review – “I had the pleasure of seeing this on Day 2 ... I would love to see this movie again and maybe even dig deeper into what I saw... I would suggest watching Project-M. Especially if you like sci-fi and anything related to space travel.”
